The Connecticut Police Chiefs Association

The CPCA is the oldest professional law enforcement association in Connecticut. The organization was founded in 1934 by supporters who thought that quality law enforcement should be everyone's business. Today, over 70 years later, the membership is comprised of Connecticut's municipal and university police chiefs. Supporting members include senior police officers, representatives of state and federal law enforcement, security and private industry professionals, and citizens who are concerned and interested in the welfare and advancement of law enforcement. The CPCA is dedicated to serving its members and the public by increasing the understanding of the role of the police in the criminal justice system and by fostering improvements in law enforcement education and research. The Association also helps to establish standards of professional conduct and promote the advancement of law enforcement education and training. In addition, it provides a forum for the exchange of information and legal opinions through discussion, study and publications.

Thanks to your support of the CPCA Golf Classic, the association will continue to serve the public by improving and enhancing law enforcement in Connecticut.
